Putting Up With The Nay-Sayers

By Ruby Larson

Although I suspect that golfers, quilters, bird watchers and bowlers rarely deal with friends who are critical of their choice of hobby, I often find myself defending my favorite pastime, sweepstakeing. Well meaning colleagues tell me that I'm wasting my time. Nosy neighbors warn me by saying, "Nobody ever really wins those things." If you've found yourself in a similar position, here are some suggestions for comebacks to tell those Negative Nellies and Debbie Downers.

1. Money Matters - Others may question how much I spend on 3x5 cards and envelopes, but I'm sure it's cheaper than paying for those country club membership dues, Plus, my hobby has the potential to pay for itself - a $100 win can pay for a lot of postage stamps.
2. Perfectly Portable - How many hobbies can you enjoy rain or shine, anywhere you go? I can work on my sweepstakes entries while I sit in an airport, wait for the kids to finish baseball practice, or when I'm home sick with a nasty cold.
3. No Partner Needed - Unlike tennis or bridge, sweepers can go solo. If you're an introvert, it's the perfect activity. If you're an extrovert, you can join a sweepstakes club or attend a convention to find fellow sweepers.
4. Bragging Rights - While other might boast about their new high score on a video game or the great photos they took over the weekend, a sweepstakes win is sure to draw more attention from your office pals. Everyone would rather hear about the cruise you won than your cubicle mate's latest chess tournament.
5. Versatility Rules - Whether you're a techie who loves texting and online entries, or an old-school sweeper devoted to the paper and pen method, there are plenty of opportunities for you. You can also choose between local and national contests, essay contests, and drop-in entries. Or you can try your luck at them all!
6. Can't afford it? Win it! - All of us can think of things we'd love to have, but our budgets don't stretch that far. For me, trips fall into that category, so I look for vacation sweepstakes. Two years ago my husband and I got to attend the Daytona 500 that way, and it was an experience we'll never forget.
7. Not-so Competitive Spirit - Sweepers don't sweat over the pressure of tracking points or handicaps. There's no public humiliation over losing, but you might find yourself surrounded by admirers when you score a big win. There are also no injuries to worry about (except for an occasional muscle cramp in your hand from filling out all those forms).
8. The Thrill of it All - Sweepstakes addicts know the excitement of getting that e-mail, phone call, or letter informing them of a stupendous prize. Their Doubting Thomas friends, on the other hand, will never know that great feeling, since those who don't enter are guaranteed not to win!

So, the next time those around you poke fun of your hobby, let them know that sweepstakeing is in a class by itself!
